PUBLIC COMMENT

Joel Stirling stated that he is an engineer in Clark County and his firm is representing one of several projects in the Salmon Creek area tentatively slated to go forward. He said they are pressured to find out why it's not moving forward. Mr. Stirling referenced an email he sent to Commissioner Boldt and asked that the board have a discussion regarding this and let him know how they can advise their clients.

Stuart said they had a work session during which they had talked about that. He asked Mr. Schulte if he had an update.

COMMISSIONERS PROCEEDINGS
MAY 16, 2006
CLARK COUNTY, WASHINGTON

Steve Schulte, Department of Public Works, responded that he thought they were ready to move forward with the proposal and had worked out the technical details. He said they would like final direction from the board and if they would like to advance it, then they could do that.

Stuart said it was the technical details they were waiting for and as long as that's the case, he was fine with moving forward.

Morris said she would need a briefing from Mr. Schulte before she would commit to it.

Schulte said he would work directly with Commissioner Morris.

Stirling suggested that for the seven projects they consider allowing them to proceed toward final engineering at their own risk. He noted that the time period for construction in Clark County was getting shorter and shorter as they're getting tightened in with DOE.
